MOUNT VERNON COLLEGE

1975-1976

BELL COTE

The
George Washington University

Special Collections

If I had to select one word for this year and this occasion it would be celebration:

We are celebrating a new year —
We are celebrating a 100th anniversary —
We are celebrating international women's year —
We will be celebrating the beginning of this country's bi-centennial —
We are certainly celebrating — in joyful confusion — the largest freshman class and total college enrollment in the history of Mount Vernon —
And we are also celebrating for the first time in many years a near-world peace, tenuous though it may be.

In a time of celebration, however, one cannot help but look forward, and on such an occasion as this, I am reminded of the young girl when asked who made her, replied: "I don't know, I haven't finished yet."

Today — individually and collectively — we are like that young person. We know where we are and where we have been, and we are looking forward — sometimes eagerly and sometimes with uncertainty — to what we may become. A convocation is a beginning; it helps to make us aware that we haven't finished. That's the way it should be.

But the trick is that we are never really finished, never really all we would like to be or never quite able to contribute all we would like to for future generations. The best we can do is to make improvements as the process of personal and institutional evolution takes place, and the simplest way to do this is to look with candor and affection at the present and with creative anticipation to the future. In that way — the process of celebration is never ending.

By 1875, only seven years after admitting her first students, Elizabeth Somers had formally established Mount Vernon as a distinctive girls' school offering a unique six-year, secondary and post-secondary program of studies.

Today — on the occasion of Mount Vernon's centennial convocation — we continue to appreciate, enjoy, and respond to the creativity of this distinguished woman, who was dedicated to the possibilities which life and learning provided.

And that is my hope for each and all of us today: that in 1975-76 we share in a willingness to define our individual and collective possibilities and to use that potential effectively and with exhilaration in exploring that which we may currently conceive of as the impossible.

Elizabeth Somers said it best: "Every work of the past is incomplete unless the present sustains it."

The college motto — "She who conquers herself conquers all things —" documents that belief.

And Emily Dickinson provides the appropriate climate for implementing individual and collective actions. Writing in 1875, she said:

That love is all there is
Is all we know of love.

Today's convocation provides not only an occasion for a loving recollection of what has been, but also an exhilarating example of what is and what may be.

The possibilities are yours — and ours. Let us use them well and lovingly.

The possibilities are yours — and ours. Let us use them well together.

Writing in 1875, she said:

Dear Mrs. Resnick:

We the staff of the 1975-76 Bell Cote along with the student body of Mount Vernon College, dedicate this book to you. Your willingness, friendship and patience are unending. When we are tired, when we need a haven from the never ending noise, when we have fantastic news to share or a problem to make us cry, you are there to listen to us, to laugh and to cry with us, to share with us.

Simple "thank you's" have never fully expressed the gratitude we have wished to extend to you. We hope that in dedicating this yearbook to you we can further demonstrate our sincerity and appreciation.

With our deepest love,

Bell Cote 1976

A Glimpse of The Past . . .

Mount Vernon College began its life in 1875 when Mrs. Elizabeth Somers founded a small school which she called Mount Vernon Seminary using the name of a Methodist Church in Baltimore which had been restored by a brother of whom she was very fond. Mrs. Somers' school, as it became known in Washington, quickly attracted students, among them the daughters of Alexander Graham Bell who invited the students of the school to demonstrate his newfangled machines. The portrait of Mrs. Somers which now hangs over the fireplace in Post Hall is of a woman with unusual understanding, kindness, humor and grace. She gave our college a flying start.

What was the pattern of life in those early years of the life of the institution? What did students do when they had no electric light, no stereos, no televisions, no movies and greatest mercy of all, no telephones or automobiles? They went to lectures and concerts, visited ice cream parlors, and, during the administration of President Rutherford B. Hayes, they visited the White House, as Mrs. Somers was a close friend of Mrs. Hayes. On Friday nights they could receive young men in the parlor where there was usually present Mrs. Somers and the whole student body. If you think that Mrs. Somers ran a finishing school, think again. The preparation for college level work was so thorough that the President of Vassar wrote to Mrs. Somers after receiving one of her successful pupils, to say that in the future Vassar would admit any student from her school without examination.

In the 1898 catalog entry for the Collegiate Department of the school, the following subjects are listed:

JUNIOR YEAR: Required: Art History, English Literature and Composition, Logic Physiology

SENIOR YEAR: Required: American Political History including Parliamentary Usage, English Literature and Composition, Psychology, Astronomy, Arithmetic Reviewed

One cannot help wondering whether the young women of 1900 who survived this rigorous training were not in fact better educated than their counterparts today?

It is interesting, too, to see evidence of the selective admissions policy pursued by the school in 1903-4. "Pupils deserving admission to the school must be introduced favorably by present or past patrons, and must present certification showing progress in the studies pursued in the school last attended." In 1880 the school moved from its original location on F Street to 1100 M Street, and by that date there were 120 students. Mrs. Somers knew that the school would grow and so she bought a tract of land on Nebraska Avenue, and in 1914 she leased the school to Mrs. Hensley who had worked with her for 15 years. In 1916 the school was incorporated and the move was financed by unsecured notes guaranteed only by the good reputation of the school. This campus, which now belongs to the U.S. Navy, was made up of brick buildings and boasted a Great Hall which was furnished with many of the pieces now in Post Hall. A chapel dedicated to Mrs. Somers was added in 1925 and a bell was given in honor of Miss Ames.

In the school catalogs for those early years, there are some fascinating details of social and intellectual history. In the regulations for boarding pupils for the year 1875-76 there is the following statement: "Pupils will receive such calls as are approved by the Principal, on Friday evenings from 8:00 until 10:00, and on Saturday afternoons. No visits will be made or received by students on the Sabbath or during any regular study or recitation hours. "What would these pupils have made of our open parietals? A glimpse of the very different standards of dress and decorum is also instructive.

In 1912 the catalog reads: "The supply of underclothing should be generous, substantial, and simply made." "For dinner wear, two or three simply made dresses of summer silk or voile, or some fabric easily laundered."

It is a long way from wash and wear shirts, denims, and Dr. Scholl's. The Year Books, as they were called, of those early years are written in an elevated style which reflect the highminded aims of those who served the school. In 1900 the entry under discipline read: "Fine ideals of womanly earnestness and dignity of character are kept constantly before the pupils, and the cultivation of the social graces and courtesies of daily life are ever emphasized. The system of chaperonage is cautious without being un-American and affected. The relation between teachers and pupils is close, frank and cordial, and there is such harmony in the work of the school that almost no force is wasted, and few pupils can resist the steady, combined pressure in the direction of order, truth, and noble living."

Miss Cole, who followed Miss Hensley was responsible for forming the Alumnae Council, and the appointment of the first alumna trustee to the Board. She also presided over the Golden Jubilee in 1925, the year in which the Nebraska Avenue Chapel was built as a memorial to Mrs. Somers.

From the early years, a Mount Vernon student had to study for six years in order to earn a diploma; in the thirties the Junior College was established as a separate part of the institution. Mr. George Lloyd, who had taught history for many years, became President of the whole school when Miss Cole retired in 1937. Mrs. Lloyd taught Mathematics and later became Principal of the Seminary. Mr. Lloyd had the distinction of being the first male faculty member of the school. On his first morning of teaching, he was tapped on the shoulder by an elderly faculty member who remarked severely: "Oh, Mr. Lloyd, you are a very great experiment for us." He set a precedent for it is evident today that the college has not discriminated against male faculty or administrators.

Despite the outbreak of the war, the school experienced its biggest enrollment ever in 1942, but in the same year the Navy informed Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd that the school property was to be requisitioned for the duration of the war. Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd supported by their students decided not to close the school, and after a difficult search, they were able to move the dormitories into a number of large, unoccupied homes in Spring Valley. The classrooms, library and assembly hall were housed on the top floor of the Julius Garfinckel store, which had just opened and could not be stocked because of shortages caused by war.

In the address made by Mrs. Lloyd for Founder's Day 1961, there is a very moving passage in which she describes her feelings about leaving the Nebraska Avenue campus:

But if it was heartbreaking, it was funny too as night after night, the "criminals", of our staff, Mr. Lloyd and Brooks, Jim Platter and others, smuggled out blackboards and little stoves, hid the chemistry equipment and all the things we felt the Navy could do without and we knew we couldn't. I think it is the only time in the history of Mount Vernon that the Navy has ever been unpopular! January the 15th came and the moving. Great vans were to go down the next morning, forty of them, truckload after truckload. The school seemed so desolate and our courage seemed so small. At twilight I got the key from the young ensign in charge and I went over to the School Chapel. There all was quiet and unchanged, for the Christmas wreath still hung in the window, and I went forward and knelt in a senior pew, which would be just one of the pews our college seniors are sitting in this morning. Somehow, as I knelt there, in the stillness the resentment and the hurt went out of my heart. The quiet Chapel seemed filled: — Mrs. Somers was there, Mrs. Hensley, Miss Cole, faculty members, students, servants, and I felt for the first time in my life I knew the meaning of the words, "Wherefore seeing that we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us run with patience the path that is set before us." I got up from my knees with a fresh faith and courage to go out into the cold January dusk, so down to Spring Valley to wait the return of the students. At that moment, but not before, I knew that nothing we were leaving behind was important, that the intangible things, those things that really mattered were still ours, if we would prove worthy of the task entrusted to us.

It is this spirit which keeps a school alive. "You cannot realize, very few people do realize, how nearly in those days there was no more Mount Vernon."

A search began for a permanent post war home which was found in the school's present location on Foxhall Road in 1944. In 1946 construction was underway but slowed by strikes, shortages and slow deliveries. The opening of the school had to be postponed until October when the students from the preparatory division moved into Somers and Cole House was used for classrooms until the Administration building could be completed. The Refectory was unfinished so meals had to be served on paper plates in the basement of Somers. There were bathroom curtains instead of doors, makeshifts of all kinds and mud everywhere. Once the Refectory was completed, Lloyd Hall, Acheson, Post Hall and the Library beneath it, followed.

In 1970, the Florence Hollis Hand Chapel was completed, and was the recipient of an award by the American Institute of Architects. The New Dormitory was completed in 1971, and the swimming pool in the summer of 1975.

Throughout the early decades of this century the school emphasized individual learning, small classes, a faculty primarily interested in teaching and in maintaining a close, friendly relationship with students. The recent policy of clarifying the objectives in all the courses of study offered, is a continuation of the methods described in the twenties: "The course will be laid out in a series of contracts or goals, progress from one to another to be made through a series of tests."

In 1962, Mr. & Mrs. Lloyd retired and Mr. Pelham became President. The decision to phase out the Seminary was made in 1965 so the last commencement of the Seminary was held in 1969. In the seventies the college has remained faithful to the principles of individualized education and has developed a calendar which encourages concentration on a smaller number of courses and allows students to enter the college at five different points in the academic year. The college has encouraged the applications from adult women whose presence adds a new dimension to the institution. The most important evidence of growth, however, has been the establishment of the four B.A. programs which has taken place over the past four years.

And tomorrow where will Mount Vernon be? Our future lies in maintaining the identity earned for us in the past and in the present so that the college may continue to be, as Liz Carpenter said in her Commencement address in 1974, "a jewel of a small liberal arts college educating young women in an admirable and exciting way for the kind of world we live in."

Mrs. Beatrice Spottswood

How can we thank you
For the time you have spent
For devotion
And patience
For the hours without rest.

Kindness and pride
Are yours by nature
You have roots that run deep
And love that is stable.

You have seen Mount Vernon
In good times and bad
You have touched many lives
And made many friends.

The words are difficult
But the thoughts sincere
Thank you Bea
For being here.

When we need something fast
Or change for a dollar
Your door is always open
All we need do is holler.

Lives you do save
When the session begins
With books and erasers
The confusion finally ends.

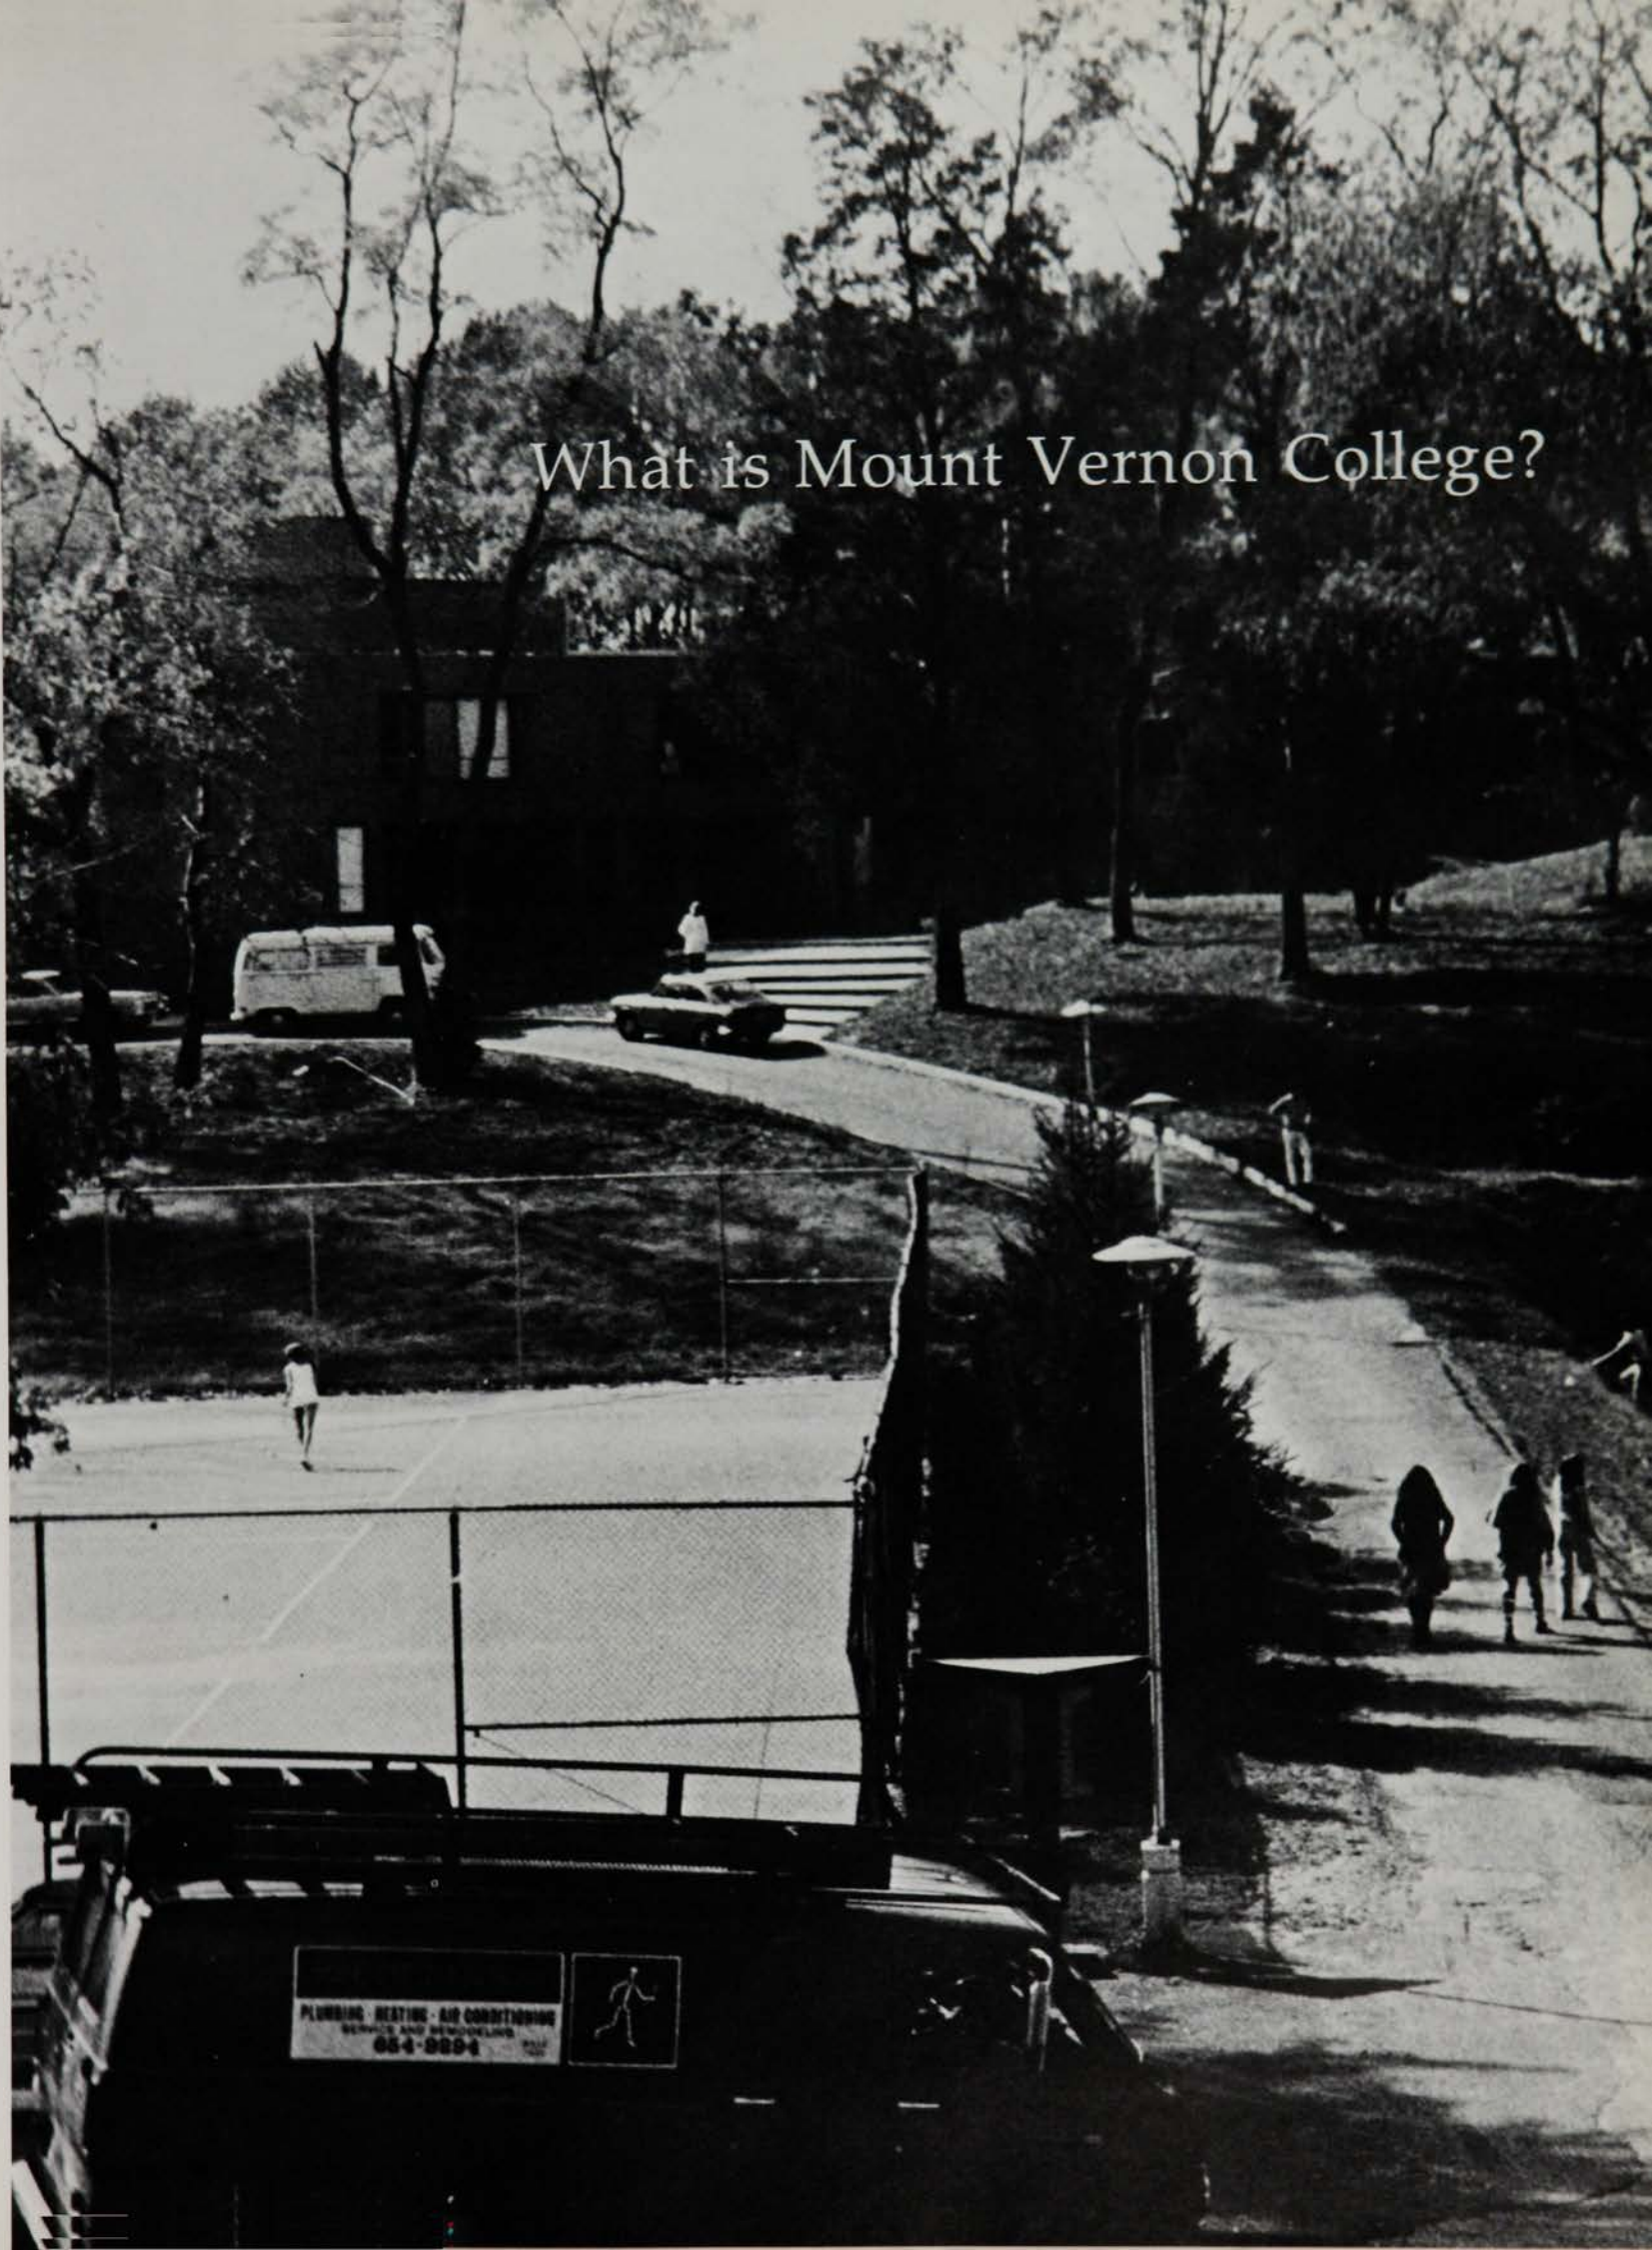

Throughout the term
Your work never stops
Because of last minute changes
In projects we start.

The trouble we might give you
Is all in jest
We think — Mrs. Beam —
That you are the best.

What is Mount Vernon College?

It is not just buildings . . .

Top Left: F Street Campus
Middle Left: M Street Campus
Bottom: Nebraska Avenue Campus
Top Right: Chapel at Nebraska Avenue

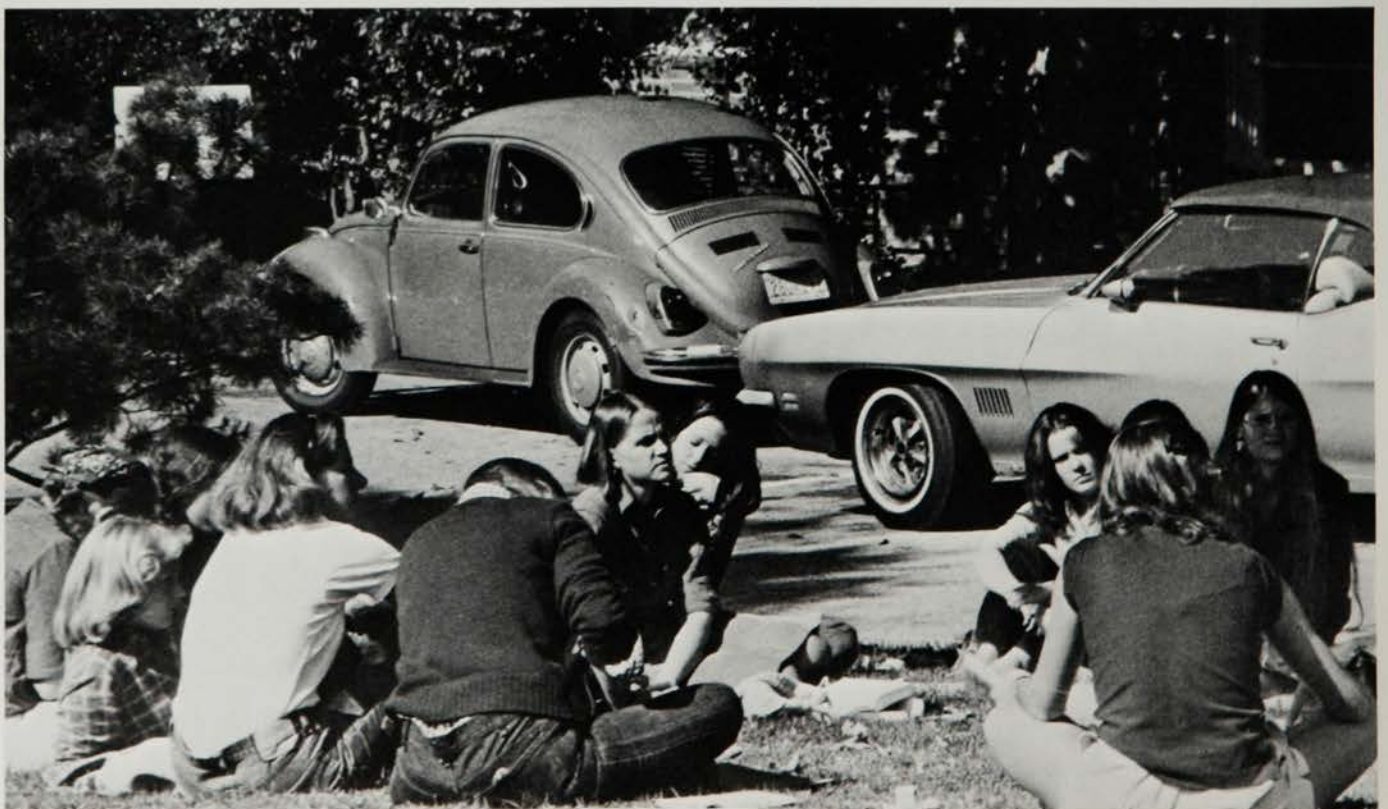

It is history and culture . . .

Top: Nebraska Avenue Campus
Middle: Spring Valley Campus
Bottom: Foxhall Road Campus

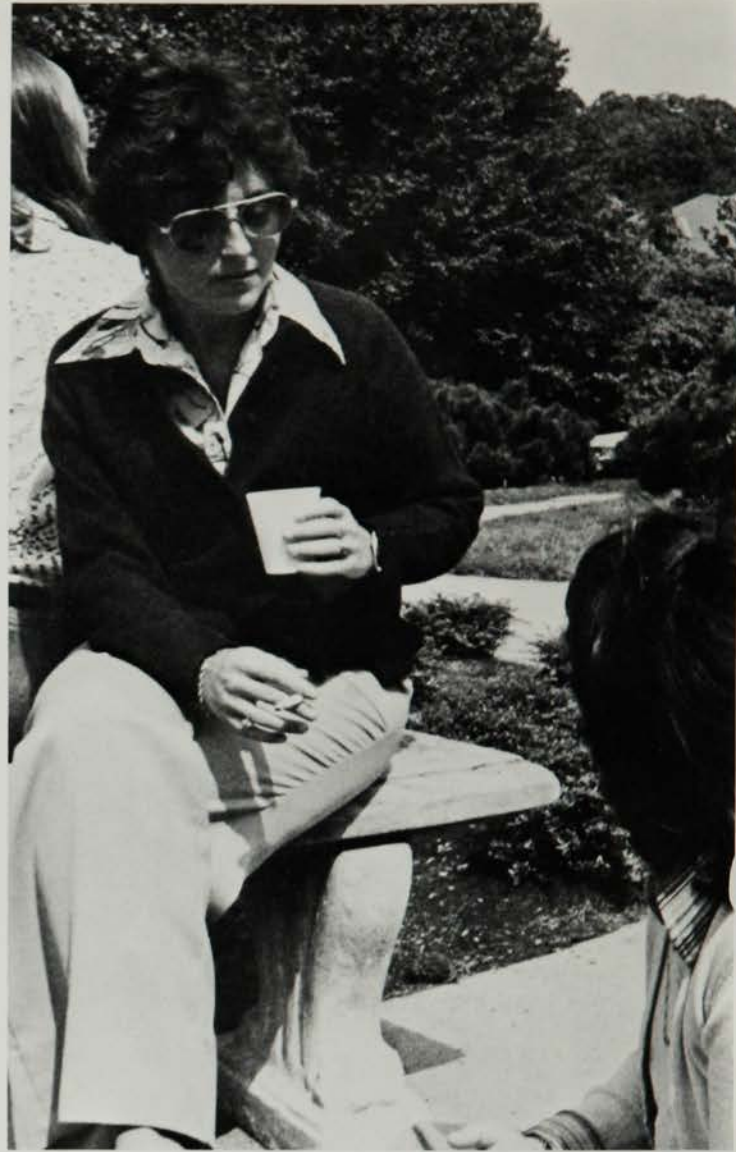

It is everyday life . . .

It is beautiful . . .

The best feature of the school . . .

Is its people . . .

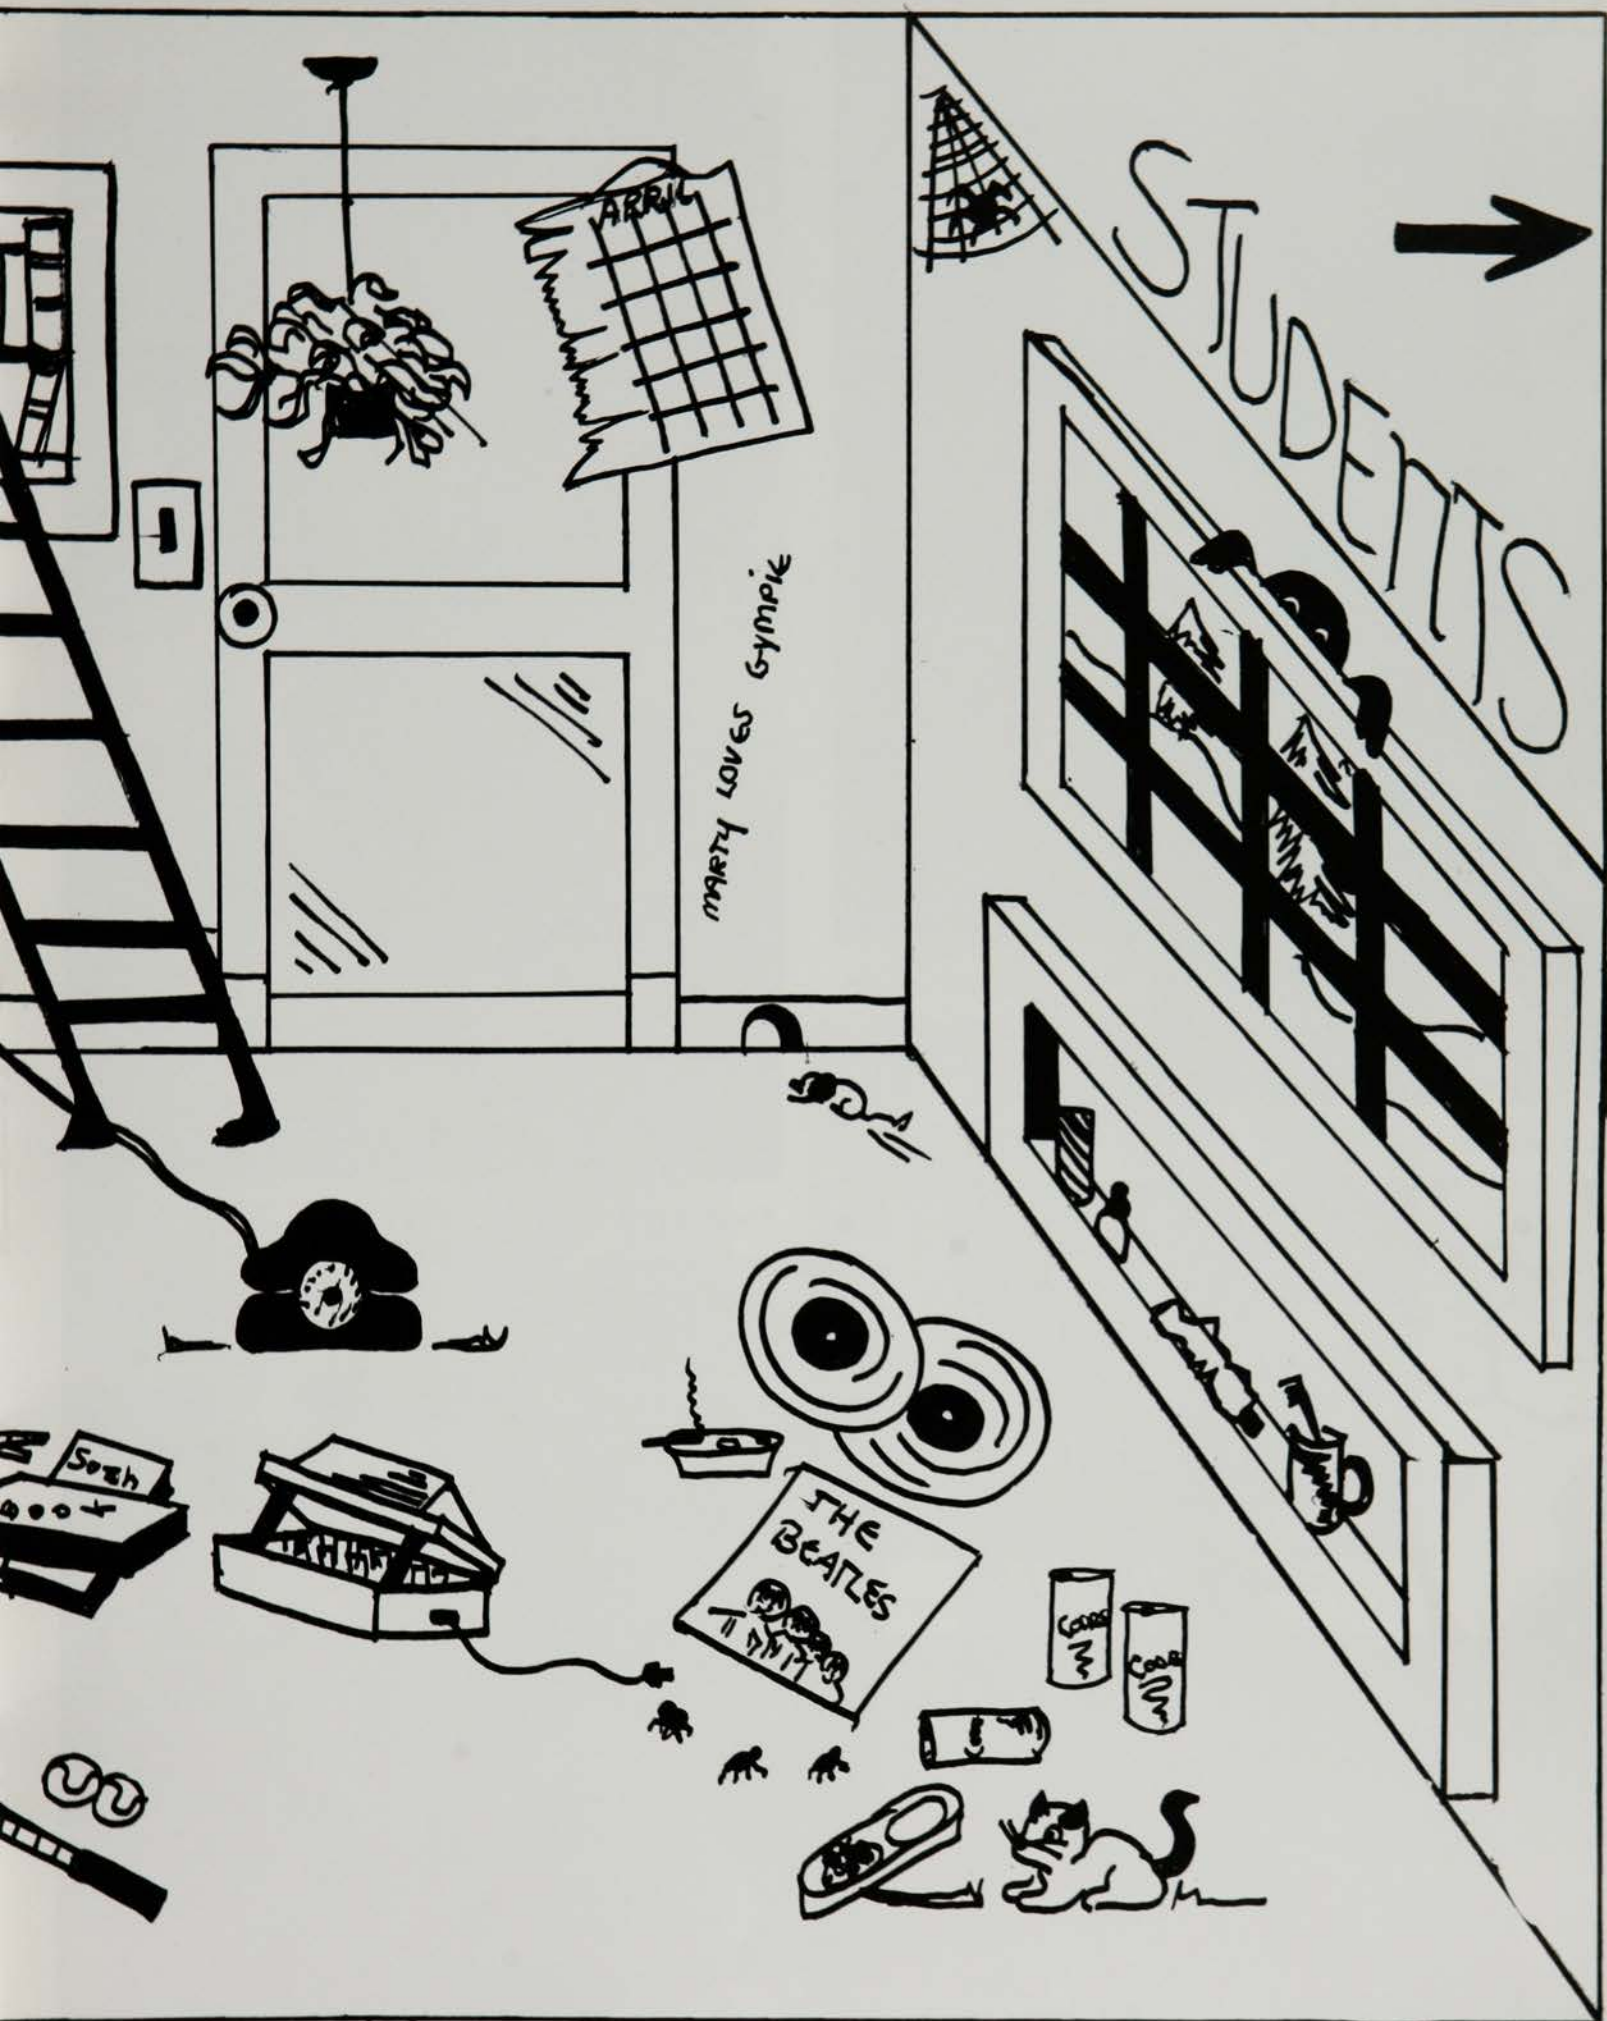

Who give it life . . .

And make it something special.

There is something special about coming home
Something that you just can't name
It's not the town, the names or faces
For even those are likely to change.

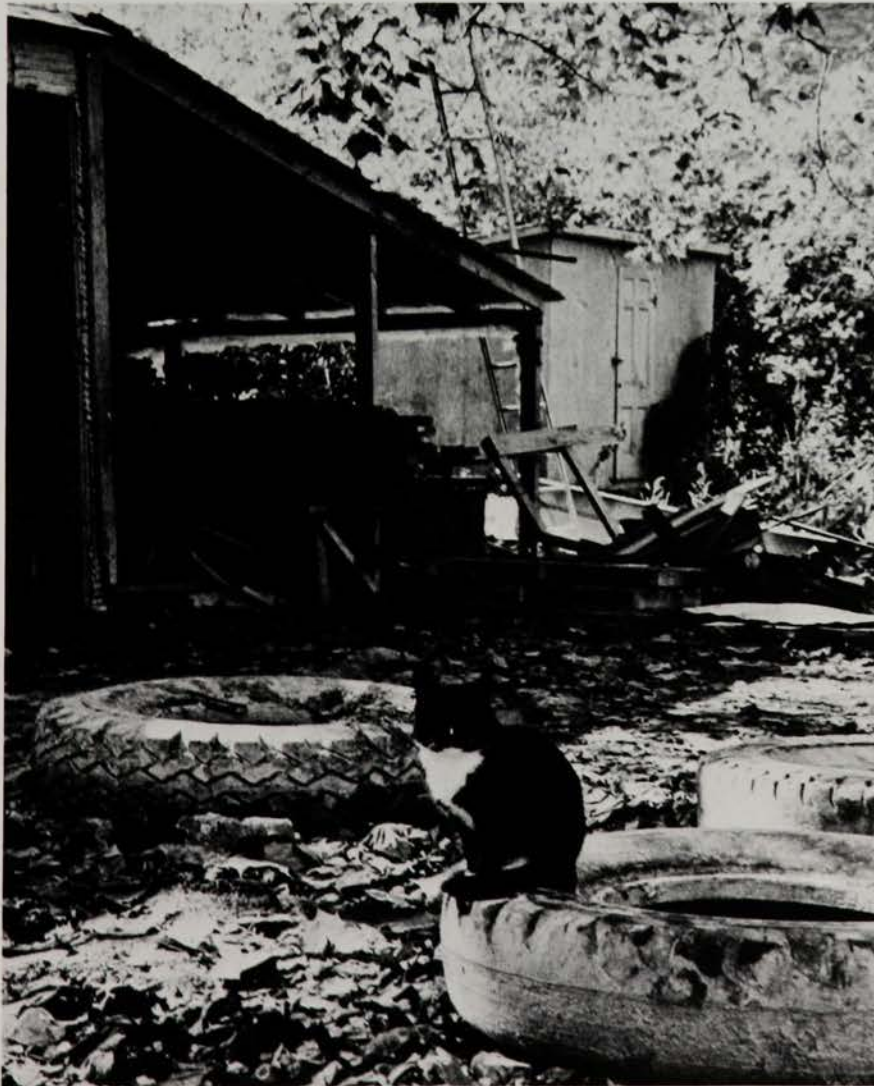

It's love, tranquility, and harmony too
It's a feeling of "belonging" that overcomes you
The people here seem to understand
They know how to listen
And they want to care.

You're ready to leave
You're ready to return
You want to let go and at the same time hang on.
Enjoy these years,
There aren't many more
If you make them "happy"
Your memories will mean more.

Time to think Moments alone
 Waking softly
 in a bed of snow
 Would it be better to live by myself or is it sufficient to wake alone.

Here I sit, sit and think Here I reach, reach and can't find Here I think, think and find no answers
 But I ask no real questions.

Lonely, only
 Because you left me.
 Scared of night,
 Scared of light,
 No ones hand to hold.
 Where are you now?
 What have you come to be?
 My need for love grows ever so stong.

Middle age,
 Unhappy stage of life I am in.
 Confused, abused
 by others like you.
 Where am I now?
 What have I come to be?
 Lonely, only
 Because you left me.

Marian Lyons

Everyday begins a new life for me.
 I want to begin it.
 With every new morning
 Everyday is a new day.
 I want to begin the day
 With my ideas and new loves.
 Night does not end the day,
 It just brings new hopes
 And ideas for the next day.

Highway Homes

all the lonely people
where do they all come from?
ragged faces
peering wide-eyed through frayed curtains hungry for a glimpse of life.
 what do they do on saturday
 they have no color TV — not even black and white only empty rotting sheds and dirty scrawing rags on clotheslines what do they do behind their peeling walls under leaky roof
 in their moth/eaten chairs
they stare longingly at passing cars waiting breathlessly for a chance that they will never get.
starving dogs filthy children
 condensed milk at every meal.
 no parties to excite them not a single new pair of shoes.
all the lonely people.
where do they all come from?
 where do they go?

There's a land I know of full of streams and lakes of plenty. Blossoms and sheaves of wheat dot the meadows.
There are also tall mountains laden with pine forests where rabbits and deer run about. I have been down to the seas where the waves lick white soft sands.
Peace is what I have found in this land.

Yet comes a time when streams are full of water running away, muddy water fighting to reach calm terrain.
The rocks they slide over are obstacles.
Their limits are set by the banks of the river, carrying the waters winding down.
Winds ripple and at time irritate the once glassy lakes.
Flowers and trees are uprooted by fierce winds and carried off by violent floods or fires.

Seas are tortured as their tides and swells beat the rocky shores.
Thunder and lightning are propelled from inky-black cloud fists. Winds screech and howl, upsetting sea-going vessels with their shrouds and sails whipped apart.

There is peace, yes, and beauty,
but there also is a stormy destruction and death in this land. But the meadows, mountains, and shores have survived. The lakes have made room for the running rivers, and the trees who have strong roots have survived. The soft sands were protected by the sand-pebbles, and the shores by the inclination of land.

It is all a balance, somehow worked out. Sun-rays slowly melt back into the land, and the brooks begin trickling. There are many seasons in this land. These are the seasons of Life. This is the land of Life.

The curtains of fog open.
In the distance there appears a honey colored fawn.
Fearlessly he approaches me hardly disturbing the silent waking forest.

The last hoot of an owl echoes through the pines.
The young deer halts on the path. A ray of sunlight lazily yawns its way through the crowns of the forest kingdom.
Dewdrops shine like jewels on the emerald pine needles.
Nature's perfume permeates the crisp air now being stirred by the West Wind.

There is no distance between the fawn and me. My small, warm hands stroke his golden velvet. His coat is soft and he is silent.

He turns facing me.
The large eyes appear as drops of molasses.

The day's crown jewels turned from topaz to opal and emerald to ruby waiting to be covered by night's blanket.

The fawn proudly and protectively stands his long vigil beside me while I lay on a bed of grass and leaves.

The mouth of day yawns;
in it is the burning red sphere of life. The yawn ends as a starry night covers us with her veil

I only know that I don't know.
Why?
You told me that it was alright.
In fact I tried to believe you.
But I had one of my moments.
I live by a moment and a thought.
I know now — another thought.
Smile.
A loner — me.
No not lonely, a loner.
Myself.
Smile.
Caught — me.
Caught in myself.
A thought.
Smile.
A moment.
Now.

Little girls grow up so fast never looking behind each new love
outshines the rest
and she never wonders why.

The love she's lost or just left behind will all be forgotten given the time.

Eyes so bright
so full of life
it never seems to fail to see her smile spread so wide or laughing when all else fails.

This small little girl will soon grow up and all along the way she'll stop to pick her flowers of love never trying to hide.

Mount Vernon College
1975

Good-bye when the clock ticks off that final moment of togetherness and all thoughts must stream into one spoken word — we say good-bye. Does it express the thanks we all feel for your being such an integral part of Mount Vernon and each one of our lives? Does it express the fondness that we have grown to feel for you over the time that we have known you? Does it bring to mind the talks we had whether it was in class amidst a deep discussion of a novel or poem or, more personal, when we needed an honest but understanding person to help with a problem, no matter what it may be?

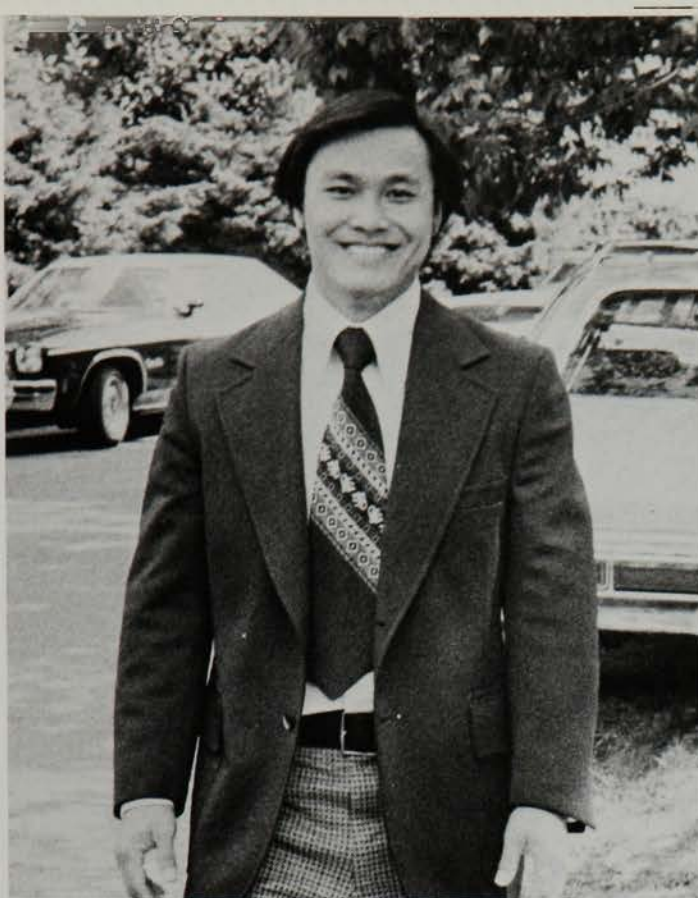

Does it say farewell as in hope your life goes well, that you may forever be happy, your dreams be fulfilled and your health remain well? Does it say you leave but your memories stay and with them we will grow into tomorrow, that we send our memories with you, may they strengthen and comfort you? Does it say we will miss you, but keep in touch?

We hope that it does and so much more for the time has come and last words must be spoken.

Good-bye Mrs. Vesser
With All Our Love.

Mrs. Valerie Vesser
Dean of Students

Dear Roy,

You'll be glad to know that, as of yet, you don't have rabies. Are you studying hard for your Bar exams? We all wish you luck. It's probably hard to study after eating those BIG lobsters! We were all just sitting around talking tonight when we started thinking about all the crazy things that you have gotten us into, from the moment you walked into MVC as an intern, through admissions, and finally as director of student activities — a pretty big switch for you joining up with all of us women . . . guess you had to learn quickly not to be a male chauvinist, but that never stopped you from talking about your fraternity every chance you got. You guys really helped each other out: two girlfriends at the same party does present a problem, huh? Most people would have thought that being a director of student activities would have cooled you down, but even though you had less time for your fraternity, you kept pretty busy here at MVC — painting red lights does take a lot of time. But then our motto is "turn about is fair play." You helped keep us in shape with football, volleyball, and skipping races, while we kept you in shape with late night piggy-back rides from the Pub. Ah yes, our little jock (alias the blue flash). Speaking of the Pub, wish you were here to do the hustle with us and to brighten up the room with your "light" flush. Of course you had to control yourself during College Weekends — your slides were good, but we're all glad you went into law instead of comedy! You're a much better comic when you don't plan it. Remember the Apple Butter Festival, the trip to Ocean City, the time you left us all waiting in our cars for you and the keys, and sledding on the cafeteria trays?

Seriously, we miss your master key, your card games, your taxi service, and your late night trips to Roy Rogers, and although we can always find someone to take us ice skating, skiing, on field trips, or to organize trips to Florida and the Virgin Islands, to us you're much more than this. Where are we going to find a singing meal partner, someone to visit us in the dorms, or a friendly interruption in the library? We miss you most for these fun times, but we also realize that without your help and guidance, many of our student activities would never have gotten off the ground. We hope this isn't an indication of what it's going to be like without you next year. You've been a great friend to us — one that we'll always remember. We hope that when you leave in June it won't be the last time that we see you. Our thoughts and best wishes go with you. Thank you. We miss you.

Love,
Your buddies.

P.S. We won't tell your parents, and by the way, what time is it in Hawaii?

Mr. Roy Chang
Director of Student Activities

This page is dedicated to everyone who has given their support and approval, whether actively or silently, to the 1975-1976 yearbook. I want to take this opportunity to thank the Bell Cote Staff for the loyalty that they have shown throughout the year. Our expectations were high and everyone did their best to present a complete record of the year.

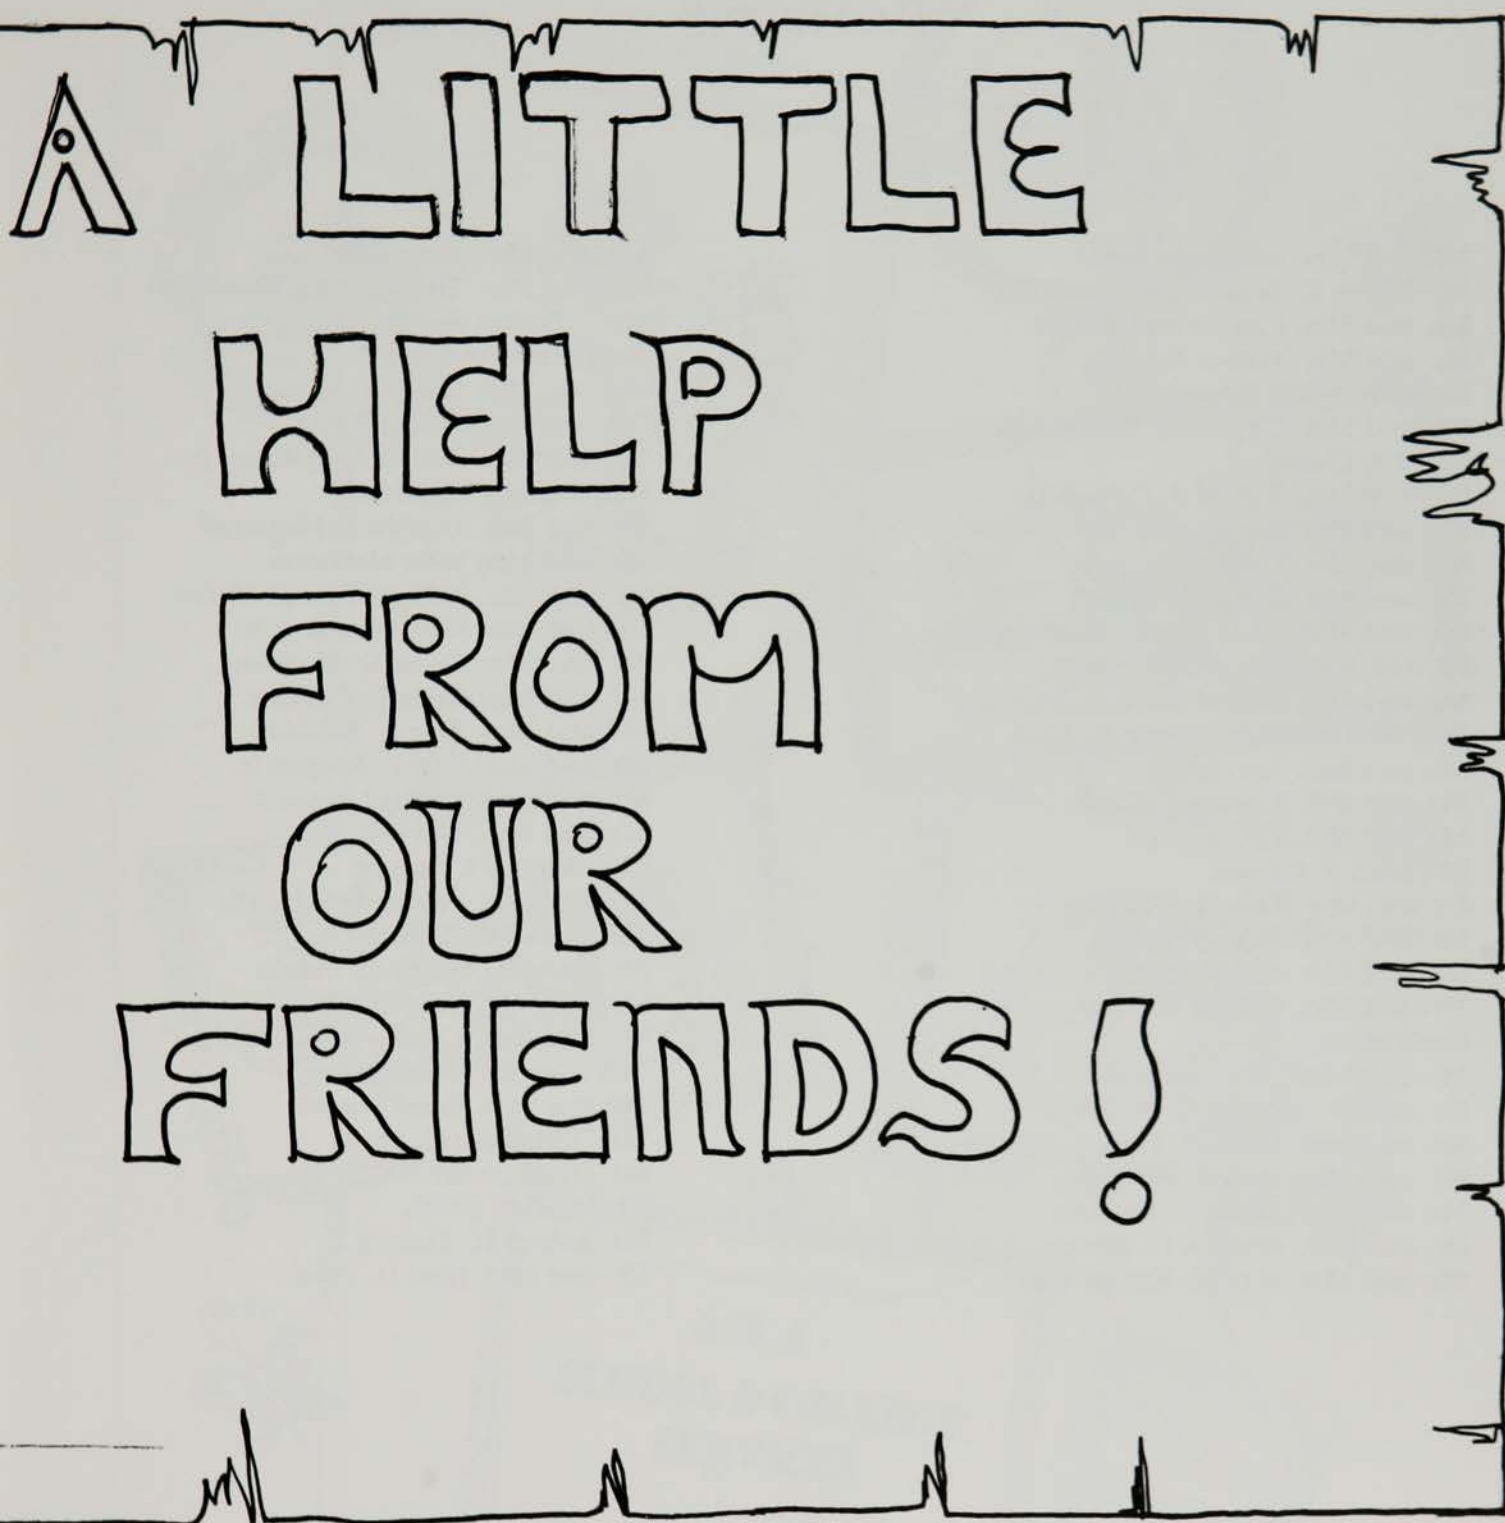

A yearbook is really nothing more than words and pictures, but through these mediums a story evolves. If this book is capable of making people smile and remember their own special moments, then I feel it has been successful. The staff and I have tried to be fair in our representation of Mount Vernon, its ideology, and the people who live and work here. If it is not a fair representation, then we are sorry. We have learned a great deal since we first began the book; we have met many people, and hopefully made many friends. Sometimes we expected too much from each other and from ourselves. But looking back, I feel that it has been worthwhile because we lost nothing in the encounter — we became aware of ourselves and our community.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the entire staff because without their help this book would not have been possible. And on behalf of the staff I would like to thank everyone who helped us, especially Mrs. Vesser, Chip Lumb, and John Bailey (our Hunter Publishing Co. representative.)

There has been one person who has contributed excessive time, energy and moral support. So on behalf of the staff I would like to publicly thank Sandra Brown. Words cannot express the love and admiration that we all have for her. Sandy has been both advisor and friend, and without her we would not have ever been able to formulate our dreams and eventually see them come true.

The time is near — yet so far away
My wishes for you are always the same
You need your good times
as well as your bad
An equal division
whether happy or sad
I wish you both enough love and hate
Some jealousy and pride
but nothing that's fake.

EXCITEMENTS . . . DISAPPOINTMENTS your lifetime will hold For both are important in filling your mold.

By now your fate seems almost complete
You realize now whose standards you'll meet.

You know where you're headed but you're not sure quite how There are many questions you must answer somehow

So you see, my friend, if I wish you just good
You have less of a chance for your dreams to come true.

TO THE CLASS OF 1976

At the beginning of this year, on the occasion of Mount Vernon's Centennial Convocation, I spoke briefly about celebrations, striving to accomplish the seemingly impossible, and the importance and relationship of self-awareness and collective actions.

Now, at the mid-point of Mount Vernon's 101st year and on the occasion of your Commencement, the refrain, "Bye, Bye Blackbird" and the wonderful comment made by Kingman Brewster, President of Yale, "that there is a correlation between the creative and the screwball, (so) we must suffer the screwball gladly," keep reoccurring to me.

Clearly this has not been a year noted for its intellectual or social conformity. It is not that some have not questioned the intent, purposes and procedures which are ours to determine and share, but rather that some have questioned for individual and personal reasons rather than for collegial and community purposes.

Those who are to graduate will undoubtedly take with them their independent accomplishments and private thoughts. However, they will still remain as part of this community for they will have left behind either the debris of their independence or a more comprehensive design which may be drawn upon by those who remain and those who are to come.

We have had a year of celebrations of different kinds concluding with the first of a new century for Mount Vernon — the class of 1976's Commencement. That is both unique and appropriate, and accordingly I wish for each and all of you successful and distinctive futures. Continue to be creative, suffer screwballs gladly, and always "light the light" so that others may know where you are.

The important thing is this:
To be able at any moment to sacrifice what we are
For what we could become.
